CARJACKERS ARRESTED, CHARGED WITH MURDER

Crime. Two men — Jonathan Rosa and Cornelius Crawford — have been captured and charged with three counts of murder after they carjacked a vehicle, lost control of it and slammed into a Tioga fruit stand, killing three children and severely injuring their mother. PAGE 02

DA: 'Bastards' are brought to justice

Tioga. Three days after a tragic accident killed three children, the men believed responsible are in custody.

Police say Jonathan Rosa, 19, and Cornelius Crawford, 22, are the two men who stole a real estate agent's car before crashing into a sidewalk fruit stand, killing three children the morning of July 25.

"I want to personally thank … the Philadelphia Police Department for their exceptional work in bringing these two bastards to justice," said District Attorney Seth Williams at a press conference Monday.

The duo will face three murder charges, along with charges for robbery, kidnapping and sexual assault, police said.

Siblings Keiearra Williams, 15, Thomas Reed, 10, and Terrence Moore, 7, were selling fruits and vegetables to raise funds for their church around 11:30 a.m. Friday when they were killed. Their mother, Keisha Williams, 34, was also injured in the crash and was last listed as still in critical condition.

According to Homicide Unit Capt. James Clark, at 11:15 a.m. on Friday, Rosa and Crawford attacked a female realtor near Sixth and Cumberland streets who had been showing a property in the area. They then forced her into her Toyota 4Runner, sexually assaulted her then drove off in the vehicle with the woman in the backseat.

While making the sharp turn from Allegheny onto Germantown with a blown tire, Crawford — the driver — lost control of the vehicle, Clark said.

Rosa turned himself into police on Sunday afternoon. He provided information that led police to Crawford that evening, who lived near Sixth and Cambria streets.

The two men knew each other for a week, Clark said. Crawford was recently released from prison after being sentenced in 2007 for robbery.

Former 76ers player Charles Barkley has contacted authorities to volunteer to pay for the children's funerals.

Germantown. Aspiring rappers sentenced for 2008 diner murder

Qentin Salmond, 28, who wore a burka as a disguise, was sentenced to 25 to 50 years, and Jamil Banks, 30, who pulled the trigger, received 30 to 60 years for the daylight murder of Kenneth Wiggins outside a diner in April 2008.

Prosecutor Peter Lim said the motive was Salmond getting "punked and disrespected" by Wiggins, who stole his winnings in a dice game.

"On Saturday morning my son called me to wish me a happy birthday. The next phone call I got was that he'd been shot and killed," said Lisa Wiggins. "I'm never gonna have another birthday I'm gonna enjoy."

Salmond ran label Allthentik Records, on which he and Banks rapped, prior to their arrest. The two were arrested in 2012.

Cosby to help gymnasts

Bill Cosby will host a concert on Aug. 14 at the Independence Visitors Center to help fund Temple University's men's gymnastics program that was cut in December.

The show is intended to raise money for the sport, which was part of seven of the university's intercollegiate sports cut by the Board of Trustees on Dec. 6, 2013. The cuts went into effect July 1.

Functioning now as a club sport, the gymnastics program would support itself with donations. Cosby is helping to raise even more money for the endowment to help supplement the program's costs.

The gymnastics program earned multiple individual and team accolades and has produced three Olympic athletes and two Olympic coaches in its 88-year history. METRO

University City is clearing room to house more start-ups.

The Innovation Center @3401, which serves as an incubator to house and help young startups grow, officially opened. It is situated on the second floor of the University City Science Center at 34th and Market streets

On the first floor of the building is Drexel University's ExCite Center.

Stephen S. Tang, science center president and CEO, said the first floor shows how innovation can work in an academic setting.

"Most of the work involves some aspect of teaching and faculty-student interaction, while the Innovation Center on the second floor is more about industry interaction between industry and between academia," he said. "So you have there on two floors the type of collaboration we'd like to see across the whole innovation ecosystem here in Philadelphia."

Lindstrom said it's an opportunity to bring together young people starting businesses in the same room.

"It's all about proximity," said Kara Lindstrom, program manager, "That's the whole point."

Weatherman John Bolaris returns to boxing ring this year

Welcome to the D-List. After fighting in the first Celebrity Boxing 18 years ago, Bolaris will lace up again.

Philadelphia weatherman, former Metro columnist and founder of "Weather Savior" John Bolaris will appear as a contender in a September Celebrity Boxing match.

"I got hit with everything else in life, so let's see if I can take one more left hook," said Bolaris, 57, who will fight Sept. 20 and donate his earnings to charity.

"I know people will say, 'Ah, what an idiot, he's gonna go box' — but I don't care, I'm just gonna have some fun," he said.

Celebrity Boxing founder and organizer Damon Feldman is using the hashtag "#heisback" for Bolaris' match, since the first-ever Celebrity Boxing match in 1996 featured Bolaris fighting Diego Ramos, a radio DJ.

Bolaris lost that time, but he's hoping for better luck now and is already in training, he said.

His opponent will be announced later this week, Feldman said.

Celebrity Boxing has been called a "D-list" spectacle for featuring fights such as disgraced Olympic skater Tonya Harding vs. Bill Clinton sex romp whistle-blower Paula Jones, and Amy "Long Island Lolita" Fisher vs. Nadya "Octomom" Suleman. A match announced this spring between DMX and George Zimmerman, the killer of Trayvon Martin, was canceled.

"D-list, F-list, no-list, s––list, whatever: I'm on the thing below a list," Bolaris said. "I never thought of myself as a celebrity. I'm just a weatherman."

White House: US, Europe to issue new sanctions on Russia

Washington, D.C.
President Obama on Monday held a rare conference call with leaders from four other nations.

"We've seen convoys of tanks, multiple rocket launchers, artillery and armored vehicles. There's evidence it's preparing to deliver even more powerful multiple rocket launchers."
Blinken

President Barack Obama and European leaders, in a show of solidarity, agreed on Monday to impose a wider set of sanctions against Russia's financial, defense and energy sectors in the wake of a plane being shot down over Eastern Ukraine, a top Obama aide said.

The coordinated measures come as the United States warned of a Russian troop buildup along the border with Ukraine and the shipment of new sophisticated weapons to pro-Russian separatists.

The new sanctions, which Obama and leaders of Germany, Britain, France and Italy discussed in a rare five-way conference call by video and phone, are aimed at increasing the pressure on Russian President Vladimir Putin.

"It's precisely because we've not yet seen a strategic turn from Putin that we believe it's absolutely essential to take additional measures and that's what the Europeans and the United States intend to do this week," said Tony Blinken, a national security adviser to Obama. REUTERS

Testing. Some liberal arts schools are making the SAT optional

At least 280 four-year colleges in the United States don't require prospective students to submit standardized test scores. / FUSE

Testing not required

Bryn Mawr is just the latest liberal arts college to adopt a testing-optional policy. Other schools include:

- Bates College
- Bowdoin College
- Hamilton College
- Smith College
- Wesleyan University

Bryn Mawr College, a small women's college near Philadelphia, announced last week that it would be making standardized tests such as the SAT and ACT optional for students applying in the fall.

"We've always conducted a holistic review of a student's application, and that will continue," Bryn Mawr Director of Admissions Peaches Valdes said in a statement. "This new policy will ... [ensure that a] wider range of academically talented students will be able to consider Bryn Mawr."

Bryn Mawr is the latest in a growing list of highly selective liberal arts colleges that have begun to rethink the importance of considering standardized test scores when deciding whether to admit a prospective student. In recent years, Bates, Hamilton, Mount Holyoke and Wesleyan all became part of a group of liberal arts colleges that have decided to make submitting test scores optional.

According to the National Center for Fair and Open Testing, there are at least 280 four-year colleges and universities that do not use standardized tests to make admissions decisions. LAKSHMI GANDHI

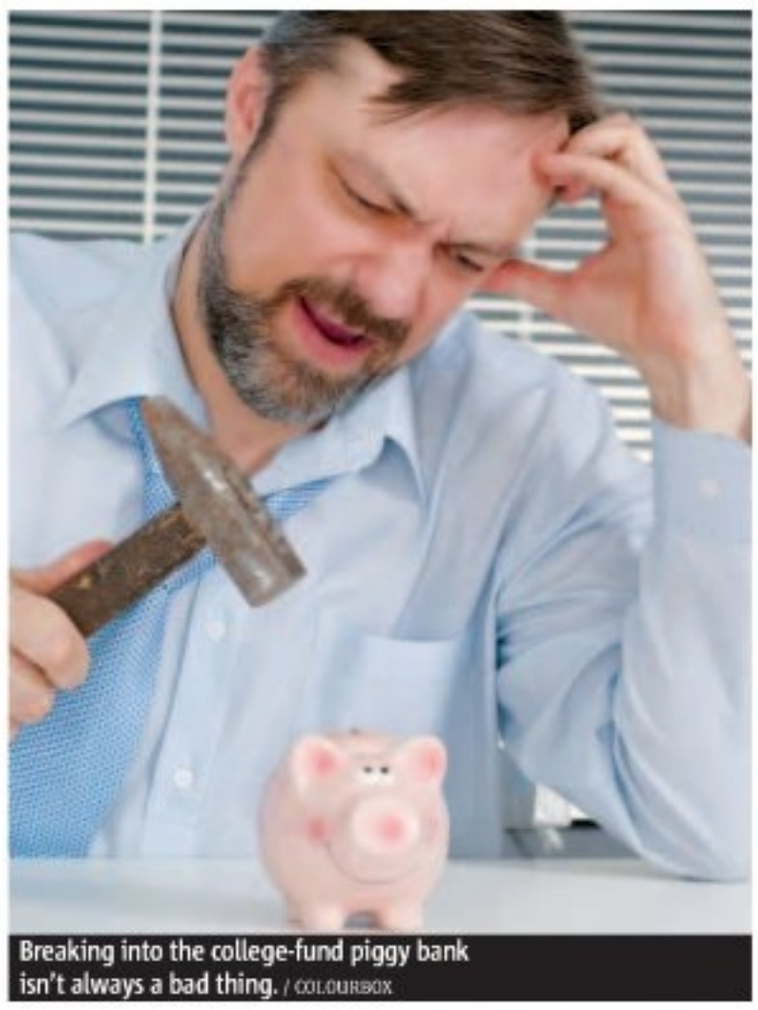
Rules for using your kid's college fund

Know the terms

- 529 plan: This is a savings plan provided by the state or an educational institution to help families budget for college. Contributors to this plan get special tax breaks, though they vary from state to state.
- EFC: This stands for Expected Family Contribution and refers to a formula that calculates family size, the number of family members in college and untaxed income, assets and benefits.
- Grants: money from an educational institution, state, government or private source that is essentially free as long as it's used for education



Breaking into the college-fund piggy bank isn't always a bad thing. / COLOURBOX

Planning ahead. Find out when it is — and isn't — OK to break into that locked vault of college money to pay your bills.

It's a moral quandary faced by parents in dire financial straits: Treat your kid's college savings as a sacred lock box or as a ready source of funds that may be tapped when necessary?

TIAA-CREF, which administrates many 529 plans for states, estimates that between 10 percent to 20 percent of plan withdrawals are "nonqualified" and not being used for their intended purpose of covering educational expenses.

Joe Hurley, the so-called "529 Guru" and founder of Savingforcollege.com, has a message for stressed-out parents: Don't beat yourselves up about it. "The plans were designed to give account owners flexible access to their funds," Hurley says. "I imagine parents would feel some guilt. But I don't think they should. After all, it is their money."

Keep in mind, though, that there are often significant financial penalties involved. With nonqualified distributions, in most cases you are looking at a 10 percent penalty on earnings. Withdrawn earnings will also be treated as income on your tax return, and if you took a state tax deduction on the original money, withdrawn contributions often count as income as well.

If your other option for emergency funds is to raid your own retirement accounts, tapping college savings is a last-ditch avenue to consider. As the saying goes, you can borrow money for college, but not for retirement.

"A parent who has a choice between tapping the 529 and tapping a retirement account might be better off tapping the 529," says James Kinney, a planner with Financial Pathway Advisors in Bridgewater, New Jersey. REUTERS

TRADE LIKE A MILLIONAIRE

TIMOTHY SYKES

TIMOTHYSYKES.COM

Timothy Sykes is a millionaire stock trader and entrepreneur.

Making the stock market less scary

I've made millions of dollars trading stocks and teach my secrets to more than 5,000 students in 60-plus countries. I've found that many people are just scared of the stock market, so let me give you some direction to make the markets less frightening. Here are three tips:

Cutting losses limits your risk

The threat of large losses is the No. 1 reason people are intimidated by investing in the stock market. Take that possibility out of the equation by admitting to yourself that you could be wrong about any stock in which you invest. It's perfectly fine to be wrong about the market, but it's not OK to be wrong, do nothing about it and hope for a comeback, inevitably suffering a big loss.

Up: The stock market continues hitting new highs. Be warned: Markets don't go up forever, and August to October is an historically dangerous time.

Down: Amazon reported more losses, claiming they're investing to make customers' user experiences better.

I've made millions of dollars, but I also lose roughly 30 percent of the time. How am I still rich? Because I cut my losses quickly, and my larger wins greatly outnumber my small losses.

Be a realist

Everyone loves the talking E*Trade baby in TV commercials, and brokers make the stock market seem like a fun and safe place to grow your nest egg. They won't tell you that even in bull markets, most stocks go down, 90 to 95 percent of traders lose consistently and that 70 percent of professional money managers fail to beat the most popular market indices year in year out.

Don't trust talking babies on TV; they're luring you into a sucker's game. You should know the odds are against you, and without diligent study and proper expectations, you set yourself up for disappointment.

Keep it simple

I've found that simple rules — such as buying small companies that break out to new highs when they have great earnings or when they announce they're working with much bigger companies and betting against blatant scams that have inflated prices due to their having lured in suckers — are the most effective way to getting rich in the stock market.

There are many snake oil salesman who talk a big game but can't back up their track records. They exist just to intimidate you and make you feel like you need them and their gimmicks. Trust me, you don't.

Learn from successful traders and investors who enjoy teaching others and share tips freely on social media because we enjoy helping others succeed. No gimmicks, just full transparency: That's the future of finance.

So that was the reason Selena Gomez liked Justin Bieber all along?

Justin Bieber is reportedtly none too thrilled that on-again, off-again girlfriend Selena Gomez appears to be total BFFs with model Cara Delevingne, according to the Sun. "Justin has called Cara on more than one occasion wanting to know what's going on. It's been clear that he's had a drink beforehand, too," says a source. I can understand Bieber's concern. Delevingne, you see, was most recently dating actress Michelle Rodriguez, and while the same source accusing Bieber of drunken, paranoid phone calls claims the relationship between Delevingne and Gomez is platonic, Gomez did date Bieber for a long time. And anyone who's seen the Tumblr "LESBIANS That Look Like Justin Bieber" knows where I'm going with this.

Jay Z says Kimye is 'bad for business'

New details are leaking out as to why Jay Z and Beyonce sat out pal Kanye West's recent wedding: Apparently, they were too good for it. "Beyonce wasn't going to allow [Kim Kardashian, West's new bride] to socially climb her. They are guarding like hell their status," a source tells Page Six. "Jay didn't want Kanye with [the bride]. He thinks it's bad for business. I think Jay lost a little respect for Kanye there." Advantage: Jay and Beyonce.

Back in 2012, Beyonce, Jay Z and Kanye West were inseparable.

50 candles for Sandy

Sandra Bullock toasted her 50th birthday this weekend with a lavish trip to Jackson Hole, Wyoming, with Chelsea Handler and a group of other female friends, according to E! News. The group was spotted hitting the Million Dollar Cowboy Bar for a quick drink, though it didn't appear to be a rager. "There were probably six to 10 women in the group. It appeared to be a ladies' night," a source says. "It was pretty low-key. They all had one drink and were all dressed casually."

Ashton and Mila to marry in 2015

Fans waiting to see Ashton Kutcher and Mila Kunis walk down the aisle are going to have to sit tight for another 12 months, as the engaged expectant parents are reportedly looking at a July 2015 wedding date, according to Radar Online.

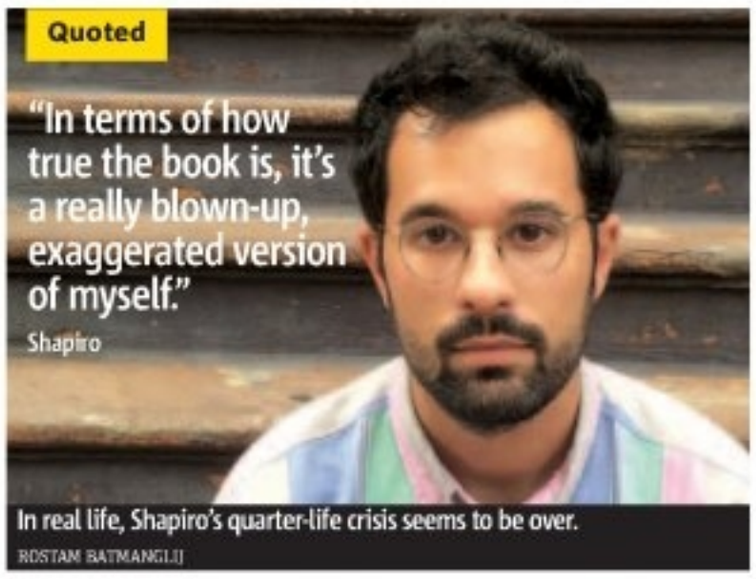
Art imitates life (almost) in David Shapiro's new novel

Almost too real. "You're Not Much Use to Anyone" explores our obsession with online popularity.

Quoted



In real life, Shapiro's quarter-life crisis seems to be over.
ROSTAM BATMANGLIJ

Freaking out about success you've yet to attain, asking yourself if you should go to law school and determining your self-worth by the number of page views your blog gets are likely a big part of your 20s. David Shapiro has been there, done that and wrote the semi-autographical book about it.

"In terms of how true the book is, it's a really blown-up, exaggerated version of myself," Shapiro says. In the book, the narrator — David S. — is an insecure post-grad who becomes Internet-famous by starting a Tumblr reviewing the reviews of an indie music website. In real life, the same thing happened to Shapiro when he started his Tumblr, Pitchfork Reviews Reviews. "I wish I didn't see the world like the narrator does, but I know that way of seeing the world will always be a part of me," he tries to explain, adding that the parts of the book that are fictional mostly relate to the friends and timeline.

When talking with Shapiro, he does seem a lot like David S. He hasn't figured out how to stop caring about his online presence ("It feels like a rat race in a way. ... I would like to get out of it"), and he doesn't exactly exude confidence ("My publicist told me I had to be more confident about this book and my work because I'm trying to sell it. But I told her if I was more confident, I couldn't have written this book").

As if the title didn't give it away — the book shares its name with a Belle and Sebastian song — music is a huge part of the book, and Belle and Sebastian in particular. Shapiro says he listened to Belle and Sebastian exclusively while writing the book and still listens to them every day on the subway. "There's a deep theme of feeling sorry for yourself and feeling inadequate. ... It's like a security blanket. You know what I mean?"

Now 25, Shapiro is no longer the lost post-grad he was in this semi-autobiographical novel. After doing what many confused graduates do (law school) he seems to have figured everything out. "Incidentally, I love law school more than anything I have ever done," he says. "I feel like, wow, I'm in the right place. I found what I'm supposed to do."

This is the only kind of gang-related activity you're likely to see in Glasgow these days: a Gaelic dance to folk music. / PEOPLE MAKE GLASGOW

At this iconic Glasgow music venue known for raucous crowds and intimate shows, The Jesus and Mary Chain, one of the country's most successful exports, will play their definitive album "Psychocandy" in its entirety for two nights in November.

Glasgow: Hey, the gangs aren't here

UK. This European city has eradicated its more violent residents and is reaching out to artists to revitalize.

Throughout much of Europe, Glasgow generally has been known for gang-related activity. But for every gang member this Scottish city pushes out, it tries to bring in a young artist as a replacement.

The city's artistic engine is the Glasgow School of Art, where students surround themselves with classic and contemporary works of art as they learn within the school's iconic building designed by the city's most famous artist, Charles Rennie Mackintosh.

The city's architecture may be its most impressive draw, however. Along the "Style Mile," the twisting, stone-lined road lined with stores, the number of stores isn't as impressive as the buildings they occupy: The castle-like structures stretch into the sky. It can be unsettling to see a TGI Friday's storefront in an elegant stone building, but there weren't many vacant properties along the mile either, which means Glasgow seems to be succeeding in its mission to bring people in.

Genius summer parenting hacks

During the summer, it seems harder than usual to keep the apartment clean and the kids entertained at the same time. Shortcuts that make those tasks easier can be life-changing. So we talked to mom and self-described clean freak Debra Johnson, an expert for the cleaning service Merry Maids, for tips on being the best parent ever without living in squalor. EMILY LAURENCE

1 Winning the sticky battle

Between juice boxes, melting sugary snacks and who knows what else, summer is a sticky mess. To keep your counters clean, Johnson says to make it a team effort with your kids. "Teach them to wipe up spills as soon as they happen. Work together by having one person rub the juice stain with an ice cube while the other pats the area dry," she says.

2 Cleaning up sand

Beach days with the kids are the best, but it also means you'll be finding sand everywhere for weeks afterward. "Have kids do a little dance on the door mat with bare feet before coming inside," Johnson recommends. "Four or five steps on the mat will transfer the sandy soil from their feet onto the mat instead of from their feet onto your floor."

Let them roll around in the sand; we found a way to keep it out of the house. / ALL PHOTOS COLOURBOX

3 Cleaning up glitter without getting it all over yourself

The glitter aftermath of a rainy day craft cleanup can be a nightmare. "Make DIY lint rollers with the kids so they can own the cleanup responsibility," she advises. "Help them create a loop of tape that fits loosely around their fingers or hands so they can tap the sparkly surfaces and capture any glitter that got left behind."

4 Preventing slips and falls

After a day at the pool, kids are bound to get their little wet footprints all over the floor and leave soggy towels and toys wherever they feel like it. To prevent slippery falls, Johnson recommends setting up a towel tree in the bathroom where kids can hang swimsuits and towels to dry completely. Not only does it keep everyone safe, it keeps the apartment clean, too.

5 Getting out ice-pop stains

Funny how kids just watch it drip everywhere.

Ice pops are the essential summer snack, but it's virtually impossible for a kid to eat one without it getting all over his or her face and dripping everywhere. "The best remedy for removing an ice-pop stain from upholstery or carpeting is to dampen the stained area with [a] dish-washing liquid solution," Johnson says. "Then, place a white terry-cloth towel over the solution and run over the towel with a hot iron. This will help transfer much of the stain to the towel."

Horoscope

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. Favorable financial deals are imminent. Your talents are in demand, and you will make some positive connections.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Stop spinning your wheels and make a move. Take stock of your current position, and consider where you want to be.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. Your rivals may want to adopt your ideas. Be secretive about your projects. The less they know about your plans, the greater your advantage.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. A workplace situation will be unnerving. Keep your emotions under control. In the end, the changes will benefit you.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. Don't let people walk all over you. If you are not feeling fulfilled in your current situation, consider moving on.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20. You will meet a potential business partner today. The time is right to look into a new field or position. Check out local job websites for inspiration.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21. Time spent with your family will increase substantially if you are able to turn a hobby into a lucrative business.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20. Someone around you is likely to be argumentative. Stay out of the line of fire. Do an outdoor activity until things calm down.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22. By attending a workshop you are likely to meet up with someone who will help you develop ideas. This is valuable for improving your prospects. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Past laws never kind to immigrants

Re: 'Immigrate as in times past' (Metro, July 28) I beg to differ with the writer of the letter to the editor on the issue of immigration, as if it began during the time of Ellis Island. The first law dealing with immigration was the Alien Naturalization Act of 1790, which states, "Any nonindentured white person can become a citizen if they stayed in this country for a year." After the Civil War and the building of the transcontinental railroad, there was an influx of Asians, especially Chinese, who were brought over to work on the railroad. There were the Chinese Exclusion Acts of the 1880s, which meant to stop all immigration of Asians and the Chinese into the U.S. This act was repealed by the Magnuson Act of 1943. Then there was the Immigration Restriction Act of 1921 and the Emergency Quota Act of 1924, which sought to reduce present immigrant communities first to 3 percent of the existing population and then to 2 percent of the existing population.

These laws were to restrict the immigration of Southern and Eastern Europeans and Jews while prohibiting immigration of Arabs, Eastern Asians and Indians.

HOWARD DESERVES BETTER

The Voice of Philly Sports

ANGELO CATALDI
SPORTS@METRO.US

After the most successful run in the 131-year history of the franchise, the Phillies have begun the sad process of scripting dignified endings for the heroes of that era. It's not going well.

Just last week, Ryan Howard endured the embarrassment of a benching that was inevitable and still shocking. Thanks to general manager Ruben Amaro Jr. and manager Ryne Sandberg, the Phils' second-best home-run hitter of all time spent a week that ended with the first real display of anger in his decade on the team.

Meanwhile, trade rumors have been rippling throughout baseball for weeks about Chase Utley, Jimmy Rollins, Carlos Ruiz and Cole Hamels, with Amaro dousing and then refueling the speculation with nonsensical comments.

If this is really the best they can do, the entire management team should leave right along with these aging players, including overly sentimental president Dave Montgomery, a never-more-clueless Amaro and a double-talking Sandberg.

The handling of Howard's demotion was symbolic of the ineptitude of the so-called brain trust running the Phillies. First, Sandberg benched Howard against lefties, then the slumping slugger remained out of the lineup against a right-handed pitcher, Tim Hudson, and finally the proud first baseman snapped.

When reporters approached the normally unflappable Howard after the Hudson benching, he barked, "Talk to him," and pointed at Sandberg's office. After hitting his first home run in two months at Citizens Bank Park Sunday, Howard played the victim again, asking reporters if they wanted to trade places with him.

Despite his suddenly bitter demeanor, Howard deserves a better exit than this. The latest reports are the Phils are begging AL teams to take Howard before the trade deadline.

Of course, Amaro has been denying everything. Even though Howard has not been starting against lefties for weeks now, the GM claims there is no platoon. Even though rumors have been swirling for weeks, there have been no substantive trade talks with other teams. It is all shameless bull.

And so are the constantly conflicting remarks Amaro has been making about the other Phillies. Oh, it's probably true they wouldn't trade Utley, since the city loves the guy. But Rollins and the other aging veterans are available for a bargain-basement price. The problem is, most have untradeable contracts, thanks to Amaro.

The 2008 Phillies will always have a place next to their 1980 counterparts as our most-beloved baseball teams because they won the World Series. What the fans should not have to endure is the clumsy dissolution of a thrilling era. The past week was undignified, for that team and their loyal fans. They deserve better than this.

Ryan Howard is struggling at the plate, but that doesn't mean he should be treated with such disdain by the Phillies. / GETTY IMAGES

Cataldi on Phillies management

The handling of Howard's demotion was symbolic of the ineptitude of the so-called braintrust running the Phillies.

NFL defends Rice ban

The NFL defended the much-maligned two-game suspension of Ravens running back Ray Rice on Monday. NFL Senior Vice President of Labor Policy Adolpho Birch told ESPN "in terms of sending a message about what the league stands for, we've done that." The lenient suspension for Rice knocking his fiancee unconscious has received widespread criticism.

Rice suspension brings out worst in NFL, Goodell

Visit Metro.us to see Stephen A. Smith's lame Rice apology.

Ray Rice punched his girlfriend in the face, knocking her unconscious, then dragged her limp body out of a casino elevator. There is no other interpretation for what the Ravens running back did because surveillance cameras captured the latter part of this outrageous act of domestic abuse.

You can see it for yourself, right now, on the Internet.

For this horrific behavior, Rice received a two-game suspension from NFL commissioner Roger Goodell, who issued the ruling last week after a study of the tape and interviews with Rice and his now-wife Janay.

Somehow, the most powerful man in sports decided beating up a woman is worth half as much time on the sidelines as taking a banned substance.

Welcome to the NFL justice system, a perfect reflection of the arrogance and hypocrisy of America's most popular sport. Only the NFL would be so soulless as to pull its own punch after what Rice did.

Only the all-powerful NFL would even think it could get away with it — which, apparently, it has. So far, there hasn't been a peep of public protest.

Where are the pressure groups now? Is this issue less important than the name of Washington's team? Where are the feminists on this appalling issue?

Go watch the video of Rice swinging around a defenseless woman like a rag doll. And then try — just try — to feel good about the NFL and Goodell.

Cataldi. Get onboard with Kelly or you will be sent packing fast

Chip Kelly didn't have to say it, but the Eagles head coach did anyway on the very first day of training camp Saturday. His exact words were: "If you can't follow the rules, you're not going to be here."

He was talking about Lane Johnson, the second-year right tackle who was suspended four games for using a banned substance, but it could have been anybody on the roster. The message has never been clearer than it is right now, before this season of great expectations. Kelly will suffer no fools.

The biggest clown in Kelly's first season was DeSean Jackson, a gifted-but-delusional wide receiver who thought he didn't have to show up on time, play hard every snap or listen to the coaches. Jackson is in Washington now.

Meanwhile, Kelly is exuding a confidence that is contagious. Jason Kelce, a regular guest on my WIP radio show, said last week the coach's ability to get players to embrace the need for following rules is his secret to success. Kelly is not a dictator; he is a communicator. The players believe in him. Or else.

Jackson is gone because he never absorbed that basic tenet of Kelly's coaching. Johnson is the next to go if he hurts his team again by not following the simple rule of checking with the training staff before taking medication. Kelly will allow one dumb mistake — especially if you're a first-round pick like Johnson — but not two.

The Eagles are embarking right now on a magical season. You read it here first, with no disclaimers: They are going to be terrific, and the biggest reason is because Kelly has already cleared the biggest hurdle for an NFL coach. He has a team that believes what he says, and follows what he demands.

Final thought

"Kelly is exuding a confidence that is contagious."

It's my way or the highway for Chip Kelly.

GETTY IMAGES

Idle thoughts ...

What else is eating at Angelo Cataldi this week?

- If these are Jonathan Papelbon's final days with the Phillies, he is leaving the way all mercenaries do — with no dignity. Last week, the closer wouldn't speak after blowing one save, and said he really enjoyed the thunderous boos after a second clunker. There are bigger problems than Papelbon on the Phillies. But there is certainly no bigger jackass.
- Ruben Amaro's obsession with Phillippe Aumont is getting embarrassing. The general manager called up the wild, inept reliever again last week. "Maybe the fifth time's the charm," Amaro said. And he was serious.

SAM WAS DRAFTED BY THE ST. LOUIS RAMS.

GETTY IMAGES

- Tony Dungy is the most sanctimonious man in sports, but the ex-Colts head coach — and current NBC broadcaster — was unfairly criticized last week for saying he wouldn't have drafted the first outwardly gay NFL player, Michael Sam, because it would be too much of a distraction. What should Dungy have done instead — lied? If you might not like the answer, don't ask the question.

Report: Wolves want Young to replace Love

Most believe Kevin Love will be traded before the end of this NBA offseason. The Timberwolves are now prepping accordingly, according to ESPN.com. Minnesota has "expressed interest" in Sixers power forward Thaddeus Young as a potential replacement for Love, sources told the website.

The report also said that the Timberwolves are continuing to discuss trade possibilities that would ship Love to the Cavaliers.

Young posted a career-best 17.9 points per game last season with the Sixers in his seventh season out of Georgia Tech.

The 26-year-old Young is likely deemed somewhat expendable by Sixers management considering he has just two years left on his current deal, Philly isn't anywhere close to contending for a title in the next two years and head coach Brett Brown is likely to invest playing time to young big men Nerlens Noel and Joel Embiid. MATT BURKE

MLB. Lester, not Lee the lefty most likely to be dealt at deadline

Red Sox starter Jon Lester made headlines this past weekend by hinting that a relatively bizarre scenario — one in which he would be traded to a contender before Thursday's trade deadline but re-sign with the Red Sox in the offseason — could ultimately take place.

"Yeah, why not?" Lester told Comcast New England's Sean McAdam. "I mean, [Boston] is what I know, this is what I love. Like I've said plenty of times, this is where I want to be. And if they trade me, I completely understand. No hard feelings."

Lester currently owns a 10-7 record, a 2.52 ERA and a 1.12 WHIP in 2014. He has a sparkling 2.11 ERA in the playoffs, having played in eight different postseason series' with the Sox. He would be the ultimate rent-a-player.

Phillies lefty Cliff Lee was another big-name lefty thought to be on the block this week, but the consensus now is that if Lee is dealt at all it would more than likely come in August after clearing waivers. MATT BURKE

Kelly tries to temper hype over Matthews

NFL. The Eagles coach expanded on his comments to Peter King.

Jordan Matthews may step right into a starting role on offense as a rookie second-round pick. / GETTY IMAGES

With rookie Jordan Matthews already earning comparisons to Terrell Owens, it's no surprise everyone perked up when head coach Chip Kelly told SI's Peter King this weekend the draft hype was "insane."

But Kelly clarified on Monday that he just wants fans to understand there will be a learning curve with Matthews.

"The coverages they face in college are different than the coverages that you face in the National Football League," Kelly said. "There's a lot more man [coverage], a lot more press-man and at times when you have three and four wide receivers you have to match up to, maybe the teams at the college level don't have three and four defensive backs that can match up to all those guys. … I think being able to combat press-man is the biggest challenge for a young receiver coming to the big league because it's different than what they have to face when they're at the college level."

Kelly also managed to get a few shots in at the NFL's draft industrial complex.

"The draft is integral, obviously, in terms of putting together your team, but literally from the day the Super Bowl ends until the draft, which I think was at the end of May, the beginning of June, it may get pushed into July at some point in time, that's all anyone talks about.

"The fact that people would watch the combine; there's times at the combine when I may fall asleep."

By the numbers

Only 16 receivers since 1920 have had 1,000-yard receiving seasons as a rookie. Only 10 rookies had 10 or more touchdown catches.

Kelly equates camp fight to 'two kids throwing toys'

Chip Kelly laughed off a question about Eagles veterans LeSean McCoy and Trent Cole getting into a shoving match during practice on Sunday.

"Their emotions got the better part of them, and those things happen," Kelly said Monday. "It's no different than sometimes little kids don't get along very well and throw Tonka trucks at each other. The fact that it made 'SportsCenter' must've meant that it was a real slow sports day, I can tell you that. Two kids push each other at a practice — it's not a real big deal." METRO
